Our Country Cousin.

This is how it all happened: My two sisters, the fashionable Misses Seymour, toward the end of a certain summer, having been the round of all the old summer re sorm and tiring of the last one, suddenly temembered that somewhere in the rural districts in the interior of the State they possessed some cousins of more or less nearness or distance.

As a last report, in order to overcome the ennui that was gradually taking possession of them, they decided to rettle down upon these cousins for the remaining days of the late summer and the heated period of the With them to decide was to act, so with almost unfashiousble almerity—and my sisters were sticklers for fashion, fooletters were dispatched to the suddenly remembered cousins and the answer to them awaited with breathless impatience. They came at last, bearing the most cordial invitation for my sisters to follow their inclinations and come up into the country at their earliest convenience. To say that my sisters jumped at the chance would be wholly misleading; thy sisters never jumped at anything; they were entirely too elegant for that.

But with surprising hoste they answered, informing their hostesses when they would arrive, and then on the heels of the letters swept up into the country, bug, bandboxshd cousins, a charming widow and herdaughter with a fine old place, and, what blessed it, real country hospitality. The widow was set down as a person who had seen some-thing of life and the daughter was voted nice, though a trifle old fashioned.

As father and I were very busy in tows that summer we did not join the ladies is the country, but merely took a week's fishing at one of our favorite baunts and weni right back to work again, so it was notuntil early October, when the girls came back to town, brown as berries and full of the plensures of their trip, that I received a regular detailed description of my counts

Harriet and her daughter Alice. And from the description I gathered that the young lady was a person who would do very well-for the country.

Indeed, my sisters gave me very plainly to understand that our cousin, Alice Sey-mour, would not shine under the city's imps.
In a few days after their return there was othing new to tell either of their trip or of their entertainers, and I heard no more of my country cousins until one day in early winter, when the female portion of the household was thrown into sudden conster nation by the arrival of a letter from Mrs. Harriet Seymout, in which she informed my sixters and their maternal parent that she would like to have her daughter spend a month in town with them.

There were sundry other remarks of a pleasant and personal nature in the letter, but they were hardly noticed in the all-obscuring importance of the desire ex-Slater Florence came to me with indigns stand those things at all.

Why, it simply can't be done." My sister did not delen to answer me, but wept away in great indignation.

It was Caroline next who expressed to me how a wful the idea was. I expressed my entire-inability to see its a wfulness, and was tobl by my sister that men didn't under-

"I imderstand, I think," sold I, "that you accept the hospitality of people whose kindness you are unwilling to return," and Caroline left me in disgust. Then mother whispered to me confidentially that she couldn't see how she was gomirely amazed when I asked why she "Why, it would never do in the world, sant my m as well as any one can, but you know that the country and city are so different."

"Is my cousin a lady?" I asked.

"Is she an idiot?" "Why, certainly not, but-"

"Well, then, I can't see why it's going to se such a terrible thing to bring her to the ance that men never could appreciate such

But, after studying it, they could find no way but to allow the girl to come, and come she did. The girls wanted to send a servant to meet her, but I insisted on going myself, so Florence went with me.

I could hardly believe that the dainty little lady in the gray traveling soit, whe answered my sister's greeting with a quiet mile, was the objectionable country cousin She was a lady all over, from her charming hat to her pretty little walking boots. She was so pretty that as I looked at my ister I began to understand the point of objection which the coming of my cousin had raised. Now, while I do not believe in love at first sight. I must confess that a strange fancy for this quiet little girl took immediate pos-session of me, and as the days passed it grew. What else could be expected of any bstinate young fellow, anyway, when this mother and sister opposed him?

So I found myself loving Alice Seymour.

But in this I was not alone; several other oung fellows seemed to share my feelings and it made me uneasy. Her manners were so perfect, and yet sh said and did such quaint and unstudied things that aman couldn't help being attracted to her. She was not conventional, but he possessed a natural dignity that was greater than convention could give. As Beverly Bridges said, she was one of nature's noblewomen. Confound that fellow, he always bad the trick of turning a neat phrase. Well, like a blind man, I went on seeing othing about me, until one day I came upon my little cousin looking very dolorous. She was alone in the parior, and she looked as if she had been weeping. who had offended her, but she hesitated a fong time before she told me falteringly that she had grown to believe that my sisters did not want her there, and that she was Somehow I steeled myself to say: "I do not want you here either." She raised her tear-stained face to me-I had forgotten to tell you that she was freckled-just about a dozen bewitching ones placed where they would do the most good. I saw surprise in her look, but be-fore she could speak I kissed her and whispered: "Let us make a little home of our own, dearle, and-" Ob. pshaw, a fellow can't tell about these I was happy.

When my sisters were informed they acted very well, kissed us and feigned a great deal of enthusiasm. I thought at first it was all pretended, and I never understood until later Both of my sisters are now married .-
